Abstract

Since 1950 the Chinese Communists have expended considerable effort and resources to promote the interchange of visits of their private citizens and semi-official representatives with those of other nations. Peiping has encouraged these visits in order to develop "closer ties between nations, more friendly contacts, more economic and cultural intercourse." They began on a modest scale during the Korean hostilities and have since been rapidly accelerated, particularly during the past three years, when they were supplemented by numerous reciprocal state visits involving prime ministers, foreign ministers, and other official dignitaries. They have increasingly involved non-Communist and anti-Communist personages. In 1956, Peiping claims, there were a total of over 5,400 individual visits by Chinese Communists to 49 countries, while over 5,200 foreigners, representing 75 countries, visited Communist China.

These visitors have travelled individually or collectively as scientists, educators, technicians, or as members of theatrical ensembles, athletic teams, trade promotional groups, social groups, or as representatives of a wide variety of semi-official organizations. Although their alleged purpose has been cultural and technical exchange, they have been used to advance Peiping's international objectives, both in countries of the Communist bloc and in non-Communist countries, particularly those with which it has no diplomatic relations. Communist China's campaign of "people's diplomacy" has been effective, particularly in Asian countries, in advertising the domestic "attainments" of the regime, in creating the impression of Peiping's "peaceful" purpose and "reasonable" conduct, and in reducing the Chinese Communist regime's international isolation.

I. INTRODUCTIONA. Objectives and Development of "People's Diplomacy"

The exchange of unofficial delegations between Communist China and other countries of the Communist and non-Communist world, referred to in this paper as "people's diplomacy," has been an important adjunct to Chinese Communist diplomacy since 1950. It has been used by Peiping in an effort to create a spirit of "socialist solidarity" between Communist China and other Communist bloc countries and a corresponding feeling of anti-Western "solidarity" among Asian and, more recently, African peoples. It has been used in the attempt to create credence for Communist propaganda charges and claims, most notably the bacteriological warfare charges of the Korean war and present claims in connection with Communist China's five-year plans. It has been used in the effort to break Communist China's international isolation by expanding contacts with non-Communist countries, particularly those that do not maintain diplomatic relations with Peiping, and to create channels of subversive influence, particularly in Asia. It has been used to expand trade and facilitate the acquisition of scientific and technical information from both the bloc and the West, and to impress the people of Communist China with the alleged advantages of membership in the Communist bloc.

The most remarkable use of "people's diplomacy" to further Chinese Communist objectives was during the Korean war, when the Chinese Communists succeeded in creating acceptance in some circles for charges that the US had engaged in biological warfare in Korea and in widespread espionage and sabotage in China. These charges were illustrated by elaborate displays of equipment allegedly used by US forces in these activities and by photographs of materials allegedly dropped including "infected" flies and other insects. Selected groups of lawyers, scientists, and other "experts" were invited from many countries to view and investigate this evidence.

Peiping's success in persuading susceptible foreigners, including non-Communists, of the truth of its propaganda encouraged the regime to extend "people's diplomacy" after the Korean hostilities to include increasing contacts with non-Communists who for one reason or another were judged to be susceptible to Communist propaganda. Gradually the Chinese Communist authorities came to realize that often even confirmed anti-Communists could be exploited through the tactic of "people's diplomacy," either because these individuals restrained their criticism while enjoying Peiping's lavish hospitality or because they were persons whose very presence contributed to breaking Peiping's international isolation.

"People's diplomacy" has become increasingly important to the Chinese Communists as an avenue of contact with non-Communist states as Peiping failed to gain the general diplomatic acceptance that it undoubtedly had anticipated. Communist China at present has been recognized by only 30 states, of which 25 are members of the UN. (The other five are Switzerland and the Communist regimes in Outer Mongolia, North Korea, North Vietnam, and East Germany. In addition, Peiping enjoys the support of two UN members -- the Byelorussian and Ukrainian SSRs -- which do not maintain independent diplomatic contacts but share in the Soviet recognition of Communist China.) Of the states recognizing Peiping, 26 had accorded recognition before the Communist invasion of the Republic of Korea; only four have taken such action since the end of the Korean hostilities.

In contrast to this record of limited diplomatic acceptance of the Peiping regime, the Chinese Communists have entered into direct contact with over 70 countries through "people's diplomacy." According to Peiping's claims, foreign visitors representing 63 states came to Communist China in 1955, while Chinese Communists travelled to 33 countries in Asia, Europe, Africa, and the Americas. For 1956 the number of countries contacted rose, according to Chinese Communist claims, to 75 and 49, respectively. The number of individual visits involved was as follows:

	1954 (Calculated)	1955 (Claimed)	1956 (Claimed)
Visits abroad	3,500	5,833	over 5,400
To Communist bloc	n a	3,941	n a
Countries contacted	n a	33	49
Visits to Communist China	2,900	4,760	over 5,200
To Communist bloc	n a	1,811	n a
Countries contacted	n a	63	75

NOTE: The figures for Chinese Communist "visits" to foreign countries include some double counting. Some Chinese visited more than one country and were counted for each country visited. The number of persons involved is therefore smaller than the figures given.

The 1956 figures appear to be incomplete since other evidence suggests that the number of Chinese Communists travelling abroad increased for 1956. The figures for 1954 were calculated on the basis of the percentage increase Peiping claims the 1955 figures to represent over the preceeding year.

B. Nature of Delegations

The delegations, travelling collectively or individually in a continual flow to and from Communist China, vary both as to activities in which they engage and as to the training, background, and competence of the individual members. For example, missions may consist exclusively of medical personnel or of lawyers or of educators, or they may be heterogeneous groupings, composed of persons of widely different skills and experience. An example of the heterogeneous group is a so-called "cultural mission," sent by the Chinese Communists to Italy, France, and Switzerland in May and June 1956. This delegation was headed by a chemist and consisted, in addition, of an economist, a civil engineer, two writers, two painters, and a vocalist.

The types of delegations sent most frequently to any one country depended to a considerable extent on the nature of relations between Communist China and the specific country concerned. Thus, although "peace" missions and women's and youth delegations were freely exchanged between mainland China and most other countries, emphasis was placed on technical missions in exchanges within the bloc and on types of delegations which might accomplish most in "selling" Communist China or inviting further contact in dealing with countries outside the bloc. In dealing with Burma, for example, Chinese Communist delegations were most frequently either Buddhist or "friendship" groups; in dealing with previously uncontacted countries, such as those in South America, Africa, and the Middle East, theatrical missions were most common; in the case of most Western European states, attempts were made to present more sophisticated delegations gauged to appeal to the individual countries concerned.

The Chinese Communists classified the delegations involved in "people's diplomacy" in 1955 according to 10 broad categories. These, together with the number of people involved and the number of delegations into which they were grouped (delegations in brackets), were as follows:

Nature of delegation	From foreign countries to China	From China to foreign countries
Cultural and art	1,353 (88)	2,048 (52)
Scientific, educational and public health	444 (43)	2,245 (61)
Workers, women, youth	1,146 (117)	186 (34)
Peace and friendship associations	649 (87)	19 (4)
Social organizations	173 (14)	6 (2)
Economic and trade	460 (32)	704 (33)
Religious	12 (1)	86 (6)
Press and broadcasting	37 (5)	48 (11)

A comparable breakdown for 1956 is not available. In general, however, the nature of the delegations has continued along the pattern established in 1955.

1. Cultural and Art. One of the main points of emphasis continues to be the exchange of theatrical and art groups. One cultural team spent eight months abroad, touring nine countries. Most significant of these developments were perhaps the visits of Chinese Communist theatrical groups in the spring of 1956 to South America, Ethiopia, and several Arab states -- areas in which the Chinese Communists had previously had little or no contact. The group visiting Ethiopia and the Arab states was made up largely of Chinese and Turki Moslem groups, featuring folk dancers from Sinkiang. Other representative functions included a visit to Norway of Chinese Communist actors to participate in the 50th anniversary of the death of Henrik Ibsen and the first showing of Chinese Communist films in Thailand (March 1956) and in Australia (August 1955).

Meanwhile, in Peiping the Chinese Mozart Committee staged a Mozart festival (June 19, 1956) to which were invited Austrian and other foreign delegations. Peiping continued its annual festivities to commemorate the "world's cultural giants" at which Walt Whitman (for his "Leaves of Grass") was honored in 1956 and to which foreign cultural delegations were invited. Japanese Kabuki players gave several performances in Communist China; Indonesian (December 3, 1955) and Pakistani (May 16, 1956) movies were introduced for the first time; and, among others, German and French authors and playwrights and Japanese and Italian painters and sculptors exhibited their skills and exchanged experiences with Chinese artists; and an Argentinian composer and pianist conducted a concert tour of China.

2. Scientific, Educational, and Public Health. Scientific exchanges ranged from a Soviet atomic energy exhibit in Peiping (May 1956) to a meeting of the Sino-Albanian Joint Committee for Cooperation in Technology and Technical Science. Other scientific exchanges included a parade of Soviet zoologists, botanists, chemists, physicists, mathematicians, and geographers. Similar teams, though fewer in number, came from other countries, particularly from the Soviet bloc.

Numerous Chinese scientists travelled abroad; one delegation participated in the Indian Science Congress held in Baroda, Bombay, in January 1955. Delegations of agricultural experts also were exchanged between Communist China and other bloc states.

One of the most conspicuous medical delegations to visit mainland China was that of 16 Argentinian doctors who spent nearly six weeks (April 19 to May 29, 1956) studying public health and preventive medicine. A group of Indonesian health experts visited various institutions on the invitation of the Chinese medical association. Fourteen Indian students suffering from tuberculosis went to China for treatment at the "Asian Students Sanatorium" in Peiping. Conversely a group of Czech epidemic-prevention experts came to assist the Chinese Communists in their epidemic control program.

Educators of many types and levels travelled between China and many countries. A group of 28 teachers from primary, middle school, and teacher's institutes visited USSR educational institutions to study the Soviet system. Other smaller groups or individuals with similar general or more specific interests visited other countries while foreign educators -- historians, scientists, and others -- went to China to assist the Chinese or for purposes of study.

3. Workers, Women, and Youth. Generally the widest exchanges were those conducted in the social and "peace" categories. In some cases -- the Philippines (students), Gold Coast (women), Senegal, and Madagascar (youth and women), -- the only delegations to visit Communist China fell in these categories.

Delegations in this category were, for the most part, official representatives at a congress of youth, students, or women, some sponsored by Communist China, others sponsored by other countries to which Communist China sent representatives.

4. Peace and Friendship. "Peace" conferences, sponsored and composed of Communist sympathizers, offered the Chinese Communists opportunity to meet left-wingers from many countries with which they had otherwise no contact. After the Helsinki "peace" conference, Peiping issued a general invitation for delegates to visit Communist China. As a result visitors from many countries such as Iceland, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria, with which Peiping had had little or no contact, made detours to China with no other ostensible purpose than to propagate "peace."

Friendship associations, patterned after the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association, have been established in previous years with most bloc countries. During the period covered by this report, greatest emphasis was placed on the establishment or expansion of friendship associations with Asian-African states. Although the Sino-Indian Friendship Association has existed for many years, the Indonesia-China Friendship Association is relatively young. Friendship associations with Pakistan were formed first in June 1956 and with Egypt (November 18, 1956) only after the call was issued for Chinese volunteers for Egypt in the Suez crises. Greatest effort over the past year appears to have been expended

1. The friendship association names are compounded with the local name preceding; thus units of the association in China are known as the Sino-Indian Friendship Association while branches in India are designated India-China Friendship Association.

in opening new units of the Indonesia-China Friendship Association in various cities of Indonesia and secondary emphasis on increasing the number of units of the Japan-China Friendship Association in Japan. The Peiping regime gave North Korea 5,000 trees which were planted in Pyongyang, and named the Korea-China friendship forest.

5. Social (Public) Organization. Precisely what delegations the Chinese Communists include in this category is not clear, although it may cover such groups as that representing the "Japanese Council for Restoration of Diplomatic Relations with China and the Soviet Union" which toured Communist China or the delegations representing Chinese cooperatives sent to study conditions in Norway and Sweden.

6. Economic and Trade. The Peiping regime participated widely in trade fairs in various countries and expended considerable resources to make its exhibit conspicuous even if its wares were inferior to those of competing countries. Peiping's exhibits at the Poznan International Fair in Poland, the Paris International Fair in France, and the Reykjavik Fair in Iceland, drew much attention and generally provoked highly favorable comments. The Chinese also sponsored fairs and exhibits in Communist China, at which wares and goods of one or more countries were exhibited.

Chinese missions energetically sought to increase trade with the non-Communist bloc; they were particularly active in countries which had not recognized the Peiping regime, such as Japan and the Arab states; and trade missions may well have served as the opening wedge in Egypt and Syria both of which formally recognized Communist China shortly after trade missions appeared in each state.

Economic delegations varied from highly technical mechanical and industrial missions to trade union delegations and experts on maize cultivation. Among such groups going to mainland China were a Hungarian textile mission and a mineral experts mission that provided technical aid in those fields; Indian railway workers who observed the operations of Chinese railways, and Czech farm specialists who helped install equipment given by Czechoslovakia to a Czech Friendship State Farm. Chinese Communist building workers union members went to New Zealand cities and Chinese agronomists went to Indonesia to study the cultivation of tropical crops.

7. Religious. In the field of religion the Chinese Communists have attempted to promote abroad the illusion that freedom of religion exists in Communist China and have attempted to exploit religious institutions abroad for Communist purposes. With ambitions to attain leadership of the Asian-African states, it has become particularly important for the Chinese to foster the idea that Moslems in China are permitted freedom of religious exercise even though Communist ideology does not condone religion. To this end Islamic delegations were invited to China to observe Islamic communities in China, to lecture at the Institute of Islamic Theology, and to visit mosques and Islamic schools in Peiping, Sian, Lanchow, and Urumchi. In turn, Chinese Islamic delegations were sent to Moslem countries and Chinese Moslems were encouraged to make the hadj.

Equally important has been the need to demonstrate a friendly attitude to the Buddhists as illustrated in relations with Thailand, Burma, and Ceylon, and in the campaign to reduce Tibetan opposition to the regime. Buddhist missions have been invited to see how the Chinese Communists have treated the Buddhist community. A Burmese delegation brought back glowing stories of Chinese Communist treatment as well as a relic of the Buddha's tooth. Chinese delegations went to Burma, India, and Nepal for various conferences connected with the current Buddhist celebrations.

Although Chinese Christians and foreign Christian missionaries have been subjected to harsh treatment, religious persecution, imprisonment, and even martyrdom, the Chinese Communists proclaim that religious freedom extends also to Christians. In March 1956, Protestant leaders from Sweden, Czechoslovakia, and India were invited to China to observe conditions of the Christian Church in China and to lecture at the Yenching Union Theological Seminary and the Nanking Union Theological Seminary. The only delegation of Chinese Christians known to participate in a Christian conference abroad was the group that attended the 1956 World Council of Churches meeting in Hungary.

From the Chinese Communist viewpoint, perhaps the most useful Christian delegation to visit Communist China was the group of six British Quakers which toured the country in October 1955. The delegation was interested in observing the status of Protestant congregations in mainland China and in doing what it could to further international peace and understanding. The delegation, upon its return, issued a report that was on balance highly favorable to the regime. Members of the delegation lectured widely in the UK, US, Canada, and Switzerland.

8. Press and Broadcasting. As in the case of "peace" delegates, Peiping issued a general invitation to participants in the conference of journalists in Helsinki in June 1956 to visit Communist China. As a result of this invitation delegates from many nations, including Brazil, Chile, Iran, Mexico, Peru, and Uruguay visited Communist China. The Peruvian delegate was the only one from that country to visit Communist China during the period of this report. Communist China has recognized the value of friendly journalists in promoting Peiping's cause abroad and has encouraged even American Pressmen to visit China.

9. Physical Culture. Although Peiping withdrew at the last moment from the 1956 Olympics on the pretext of not wanting to compete in the same arena with representatives of Nationalist China, the Peiping regime has given much emphasis to physical culture and to competition with athletic teams of other countries in a wide variety of sports. Chinese Communist teams have been sent abroad or vied with foreign teams in mainland China in soccer, track, swimming, basketball, volleyball, ice hockey, skiing, skating, gymnastics, weight-lifting, ping-pong, and motorcycle racing. They also sent a team to compete in the international model airplane competition held in Hungary.

10. Parliamentary and Civic. Approximately one-half of the members of the Japanese Diet reportedly have visited Communist China at one time or another. Large Japanese Diet delegations visited Communist China in August (42 members) and in September 1955 (27 members) and smaller delegations have made other trips. Parliamentary members from Syria, Brazil, Finland, and India have also toured the China mainland. The Syrian deputies did so before Syria recognized the Peiping regime. In addition, teachers of Moslem parties in Indonesia (Masjumi, PSII, Parti) visited Communist China at the invitation of the Chinese Moslem League (May 4 to June 1, 1956).

Lawyers and jurists from Japan, India, Italy, Syria, Belgium, Great Britain, and other countries have made numerous visits to mainland China while Chinese Communist jurists have visited Belgium, East Germany, India, and the USSR.

Within the category of civic functions also may be listed Chinese Communist Red Cross activities clearly designed to convey the impression of the Peiping regime's humanitarian character. The Chinese Communist Red Cross has been quick to make donations to peoples abroad who have suffered from acts of God, such as floods, earthquakes, severe cold, and snowstorms. Although the donations have been only token, generally 10,000 yuan, they have been broadcast quickly after the disaster, giving the impression of urgent and ready assistance from Communist China. Among those who have benefited are flood victims in Afghanistan, Yugoslavia, Mexico, Pakistan, and Turkey; earthquake victims in Greece (only Chinese Communist overture to Greece), Lebanon, and Turkey; and cold and snowstorm victims in Denmark and Turkey.

C. Costs

The importance attached to the program of "people's diplomacy" by Peiping can be measured in part by the cost of the program, both in terms of the time of key officials who grant interviews to visitors to Communist China and who participate in tours of foreign countries, and in terms of monetary outlay.

Peiping almost invariably bears the full expenses, at least within China, of visiting delegations' transportation, hotel accommodations, and allowances for miscellaneous expenses and souvenirs. The latter range in some cases from the equivalent of US $40 to $160 per trip, and have enabled some visitors to leave China with more money than they had when they entered. In some cases Peiping also pays for transportation from the country of origin to China. In cases of delegations travelling via the USSR, Peiping apparently bears the expenses at least from the time of entry into Soviet or bloc territory.

The Peiping regime almost invariably bears the entire cost for Chinese Communist delegations to non-Communist countries (for delegations to bloc countries, reciprocity presumably applies). Proceeds from the sale of admissions during theatrical tours are usually donated to local charities, and goods exhibited at trade fairs on occasion have been given to influential local personages.

The precise monetary costs of "people's diplomacy" cannot be calculated, but some rough approximations are possible.

During the period January 1955 through June 1956 terminal dates are known of 2,793 visitors who spent 17,480 weeks (or an average of 6.3 weeks per person) in Communist China and for 1,982 Chinese who spent 7,318 weeks (an average of 3.7 weeks per person) abroad. Professor E. S. Kirby of the University of Hong Kong, who led a delegation to Communist China in 1955, reported that it cost the Peiping regime $194 per person per week during a visit in China. This figure probably represents the upper level of Communist expenditure on visitors to China as representatives from bloc countries probably are treated with less ostentation. Of the 4,760 visitors to Communist China in 1955, 1,811 were from the Soviet bloc. Using $194 as the weekly per-person cost for non-bloc visitors and an arbitrary $100 for bloc visitors, a 1955 cost figure of $4,700,000 is derived. Projected over the first six months of 1956 when roughly 2,600 persons visited Communist China, this would result in approximately $2,600,000 or a total of $7,300,000 for the period January 1955 through June 30, 1956.¹

Chinese Communist visitors averaged 3.7 weeks abroad and in 1955 totaled 5,833 of whom 3,941 went to Soviet bloc countries, which may have met their local costs. The living costs in foreign exchange to Communist China for the remaining 1,892 may be estimated at $1,000,000, based on reports from Chile and Ethiopia indicating that it costs $140 per person per week for the Chinese Communist opera troupes visiting those countries. An estimate of the travel costs for all Chinese Communist visitors abroad is at best even more tenuous since all official visits to foreign countries are presumably included though the same delegation in some instances visited more than one country. The magnitude in 1955, however, might have been $2,900,000 assuming an average round trip of 10,000 miles at a cost of $0.05 per mile. Again projecting these figures for roughly 2,700 Chinese abroad during the first six months of 1956 yields a figure of $1,800,000.

1. In summary, the cost calculation is as follows: 1955 - (1) non-bloc countries (2,949 x 6.3 x $194 = $3.6 million), (2) Bloc (1,811 x 6.3 x $100 = $1.1 million); First half 1956 - 2,600/4,750 = .55 (.55 x 4.7 million = $2.6 million); Total = $7.3 million.

- 10 -

The cost of Chinese travelling abroad on "people's diplomacy" missions may thus be tentatively estimated at $5,700,000 during the 18-month period.¹

The sum of these rough calculations, $13,000,000, suggests that the program cost the Peiping regime at least $10,000,000 during this period and possibly as much as $20,000,000.

In addition to the monetary outlay, the program of "people's diplomacy" has added to the burden of Communist China's heavily-taxed transportation system, as many delegations have been granted the use of special railway coaches, buses, and airplanes. The program has also added significantly to the burden placed on Communist China's key officials, ranging from Mao Tse-tung, Liu Shao-ch'i, and Chou En-lai down to countless technical and managerial personnel, who have taken time out for visiting delegations. Virtually all important delegations are received at least by Liu Shao-ch'i or Chou En-lai and often by Mao Tse-tung himself. Delegations have been particularly impressed by the amount of time top ranking officials have devoted to them, often exceeding the period officially scheduled. Some of Communist China's key officials have developed great skills in tailoring these interviews to the susceptibilities of particular delegations, reflecting considerable effort in preliminary planning and briefing.

D. Political Orientation of Delegations

"People's diplomacy" in its early days was limited almost exclusively to the exchange of delegations of trusted Communists and collaborators from Communist China and selected fellow-travellers and sympathizers from non-Communist areas. The Communists soon learned that susceptible persons not subject to strict Communist discipline could be made to accept and propagate the most implausible Communist propaganda, and gradually they began to exploit visits of selected persons who were basically impartial or even anti-Communist. Many such visitors succumbed to standard techniques of guided tours, emphasizing Communist China's material achievements (i.e. in the construction or reconstruction of industrial plants). Few of the non-fellow travelling visitors spoke Chinese and some of them were sufficiently unfamiliar with China to accept pre-Communist installations as Communist "achievements" (e.g. Japanese factories in Manchuria). With the further development of the post-Stalin "peace and coexistence" campaign, Peiping came to recognize that even critical visitors served its purposes by demonstrating the "freedom" that existed in Communist China. Even the most highly critical visitors tended to overshadow their criticism

1. In summary, the cost calculation is as follows: 1955 - (1) Living costs for visitors to non-bloc countries (1,892 x 3.7 x $140 = $1.0 million), (2) Travel costs for all visitors abroad (5,833 x $500 = $2.9 million); First half 1956 - 2,700/5,833 = .46 (.46 x 3.9 = $1.8 million); Total - $5.7 million.

with admissions of Communist material progress, and often the criticism itself was exploited by Peiping as proof of the feasibility of "coexistence." For example, one highly respected British economist, Nicholas Kaldor, was permitted in Peiping to address a large student gathering on the fallacies of Marxist economics as "evidence" of academic freedom in Communist China.

Peiping's techniques for limiting the critical reporting of anti-Communist visitors are varied. The technique of the guided tour is well known. Wherever possible visitors are shown "model" plants, farms, villages, and sometimes even prisons. The recent trend has been to permit delegations somewhat more leeway in selecting areas to be visited, but even where delegations are given a relatively free hand, time limitations, language barriers, and difficulties in transportation are exploited by the Communists to maintain the inaccessibility of sensitive areas. Often the visitor to Communist China is so overwhelmed with a schedule of interviews with important dignitaries and tours of undeniably worthwhile sights that he has little time to exercise whatever freedom Peiping ostensibly may grant him.

Concomittant with the increasing latitude in issuing invitations to Communist China has been a tendency to permit travel abroad of Chinese whose support of the regime is qualified in some way. The regime appears now to be sufficiently confident of its support to permit relatively independent-minded intellectuals to join delegations. The most noteworthy example of this trend was the permission granted the Dalai Lama to visit India, after the regime had repeatedly invented reasons why he could not leave Tibet to accept invitations to important Buddhist celebrations outside of China. In such instances, Peiping presumably calculates that the individual has sufficient personal ties at home to make him hesitate to express excessive criticism of the regime and to prevent him from defecting. Missions including "untrustworthy" delegates are, in addition, usually supervised by reliable fellow travellers or Communists.

E. Success of the Program

Although Peiping is recognized by only 30 states, through these informal channels contacts, tenuous or well established, have been formed with peoples or governments of some 70 nations. These contacts played a significant role in breaking down resistance in Egypt and Syria to recognition of Communist China and are being employed toward the same end in Sudan, Ethiopia, Japan, most of the Arab states, and elsewhere. Before the visit to Ethiopia of a 75-man Chinese Communist theatrical group, a US Embassy-USIS report states, the only thing Ethiopians knew of the Chinese Communists was that they had been killing Ethiopians in Korea. After the visit, however, references to the Chinese Communists would hardly evoke the same hostile reaction as before.

"People's diplomacy," supplementing the state visits of Chou En-lai and other Peiping leaders and of foreign official dignitaries to Peiping, has done much to dispel fear of Chinese Communist militancy and aggressiveness, and has achieved considerable success in creating, particularly in the minds of certain leaders of Asian-African states, the impression of the "reasonable" and "peace-seeking" characteristics of Chinese Communist leaders and of their policies.

Through "people's diplomacy," Peiping's leaders have also made progress in fostering the concept that unlimited trade with Communist China would develop if only Western trade controls were eliminated, and that this trade would solve many local economic ills. Japan, in particular, has been vulnerable to this approach. Chinese Communist trade overtures have not, however, been limited to the Far East, but have also been extended to South America, Europe, the Middle East, and Africa. Peiping has discovered that the offer of trade opens avenues of contact that can lead to the achievement of other goals. Thus in Japan the issue of Sino-Japanese trade provides the Communists with leverage for attacking US policy and to attempt to undermine the US in Japan. Trade offers have also opened the way for Chinese Communist penetration in the Middle East. The Bandung Conference appears to have paved the way for the sending of trade missions to Egypt and Syria, which did much to weaken the Chinese Nationalist position in the Middle East and to clear the way for ultimate recognition of Communist China, first by Egypt, then by Syria and Yemen. In Japan, moreover "people's diplomacy" supported by a flood of Japanese-language Chinese Communist propaganda has contributed to a climate in Japanese public opinion strongly favoring a rapprochement with Peiping. Over half of the members of the Japanese Diet have visited Communist China.

In general the Chinese Communists have succeeded in establishing contacts with peoples in many countries where they have been denied official contact because of their limited diplomatic relations. Through these informal channels they have been able to remold attitudes toward Communist China and to achieve some of their international objectives. In some cases "people's diplomacy" has paved the way to formal diplomatic relations and Peiping, no doubt, has great faith that its further development will play a significant role in ultimately bringing about Communist China's general acceptance as a world power.
